Intitulé de l'UE : Découverte

Intitulé de la matière : Race and Ethnicity

Crédits : 1

Coefficients : 1

Objectifs de l'enseignement

This course emphasizes the social and historical study of race and racism in the cross Atlantic landscape. As an interdisciplinary course, it aims to:

- To develop an understanding of the social, political, economic, and cultural experiences of historically marginalized racial and ethnic groups.
- To examine the impact of race and ethnicity on individuals, communities, and societies, both historically and in contemporary times.
- To explore the intersections of race, ethnicity, gender, sexuality, class, and other social identities, and how these intersections shape experiences of oppression and privilege.
- To analyze the ways in which racism, discrimination, and prejudice operate within social institutions and systems.
- To foster critical thinking skills and encourage students to challenge their own assumptions and biases about race and ethnicity.
- To encourage students to become advocates for social justice and equity, and to take action to promote change within their communities.
- To provide opportunities for students to engage with and learn from members of diverse racial and ethnic communities.
- To equip students with the knowledge and skills necessary to engage in meaningful dialogue and collaboration across racial and ethnic differences.
- To foster an appreciation for the diversity of human experience, and to promote empathy and understanding for people from different racial and ethnic backgrounds.
- To prepare students to navigate and thrive in an increasingly diverse and interconnected world

Contenu de la matière

- Introduction to race and ethnicity in America
- The construction of racial and ethnic identities
- Slavery and its legacy

- Immigration and the making of multicultural America
- Latinx identities in America
- Asian American identities
- Native American identities
- Institutions and race in America
- Anti-racism and social justice
- Reflection and action

Connaissances préalables recommandées

- It is helpful to have a basic understanding of key historical events, concepts, and terminology related to race and ethnicity. Some helpful background knowledge might include:
- A basic understanding of key historical events related to race and ethnicity in the country or region that the course focuses on (American & Britain). For example, for a course on African American history, it may be helpful to have a general understanding of the transatlantic slave trade, Jim Crow laws, the civil rights movement, and other key events.
- Familiarity with key concepts related to race and ethnicity, such as institutional racism, intersectionality, cultural appropriation, white privilege, and microaggressions.
- An awareness of the diversity within racial and ethnic groups, and an understanding of how factors such as gender, sexuality, class, and nationality intersect with race and ethnicity.
- An openness to learning about different perspectives and experiences, and a willingness to engage in difficult conversations around race and ethnicity.

Mode d'évaluation

- The final exam is graded separately (50%).
- The continuous evaluation covers students' performance in class; participation, presentations and assignments are all taken into consideration (50%).

Intitulé de la matière : Communicative Skills

Crédits : 1

Coefficients : 1

Objectifs de l'enseignement

This course aims to allow students :

1. Improving overall communication skills: The primary goal of a communicative skills course is to help individuals become better communicators. This may involve improving their ability to express their thoughts and ideas effectively, listen actively, and communicate clearly.
2. Enhancing interpersonal communication: Effective communication is crucial in building positive relationships with others. A communicative skills course may focus on developing skills such as active listening, empathy, and conflict resolution to help individuals build stronger relationships with others.
3. Developing effective presentation skills: In many professional contexts, individuals may be required to deliver presentations or speeches. A communicative skills course may include training in areas such as public speaking, storytelling, and visual communication to help individuals become more effective presenters.
4. Improving cross-cultural communication: In today's globalized world, individuals must often communicate with people from different cultures and backgrounds. A communicative skills course may include training in cross-cultural communication to help individuals navigate cultural differences and communicate effectively with people from diverse backgrounds.
5. Enhancing digital communication skills: With the rise of digital communication, individuals must also develop effective digital communication skills. A communicative skills course may include training in areas such as email etiquette, video conferencing, and social media communication to help individuals communicate effectively in a digital context.

Connaissances préalables recommandées

*Prior experience in public speaking or presenting may be helpful.

*Effective communication requires sensitivity to cultural differences, so prior knowledge of cultural norms and practices can be helpful.

* Students should be able to analyze and evaluate information, arguments, and ideas critically to develop logical and effective communication strategies.

Contenu de la matière

1. Effective public speaking: Teaching principles to organize a speech, use body language, and engage with the audience.
2. Inter-cultural communication: Developing the ability to communicate effectively across cultural boundaries, recognizing and respecting cultural differences, adapting to different communication styles, and avoiding misunderstandings.
3. Persuasion and influence: Teaching how to build a compelling argument, using emotional appeals and social proof to persuade others. Additionally, developing skills like active listening, nonverbal communication, conflict resolution, storytelling, media literacy, and interpersonal communication.

Objectifs de l'enseignement

This course aims to :

- *Evaluate the ways in which historical cultural contexts have influenced American literature.
- *Engage with diverse voices and perspectives in American literature, including those of underrepresented and marginalized groups.
- *Identify and analyse major themes, styles, and movements in American literature.

Connaissances préalables recommandées

The students must be familiar with American history, culture, and literary traditions. This could include a general understanding of major historical events such as the American Revolution, the Civil War, and the Civil Rights Movement, as well as knowledge of important literary movements such as romanticism, realism, and modernism.

Contenu de la matière

1. The origins and characteristics of postmodernism: This unit could explore the historical, social, and cultural factors that gave rise to postmodernism and the defining features of the movement, such as irony, self-reflexivity, and intertextuality.
2. Postmodern fiction: This unit could focus on some of the key works of postmodern fiction, such as Thomas Pynchon's "Gravity's Rainbow," Don DeLillo's "White Noise," or Toni Morrison's "Beloved." Students could analyze how these works challenge traditional narrative structures, subvert dominant cultural norms, and explore themes of identity, power, and representation.
3. Postmodern poetry: This unit could examine the experimental and fragmented forms of postmodern poetry, such as the language poetry movement or the New York School of poets.
4. Postmodern art and culture: This unit could explore the ways in which postmodernism has influenced other areas of culture, such as visual art, music, film, and television.

- The purpose of literature education is to give learners and readers a way to improve themselves. The type of literature used in this course gives learners/readers specific moral behavior advice and is often in line with spiritual or religious belief.
- Focus will be on learning with literature leading to the development of not only literary competence, the reading one as well.
- This marks a change in rationale from teaching literature for the sake of developing critical competence to using literature to enhance students' reading proficiency and comprehension of literary texts and their stylistic aspects which in its turn allows for personal development within a cultural context.

Objectifs de l'enseignement

Here are some possible objectives for a course on race and ethnicity in Britain:

- Understand the historical context of race and ethnicity in Britain, including the impact of colonialism, immigration, and social movements.
- Analyze the intersections of race and ethnicity with other social categories such as class, gender, sexuality, and disability, and understand how these intersections shape experiences of marginalization and privilege.
- Explore the diversity of racial and ethnic identities in Britain, including the experiences of Black, Asian, and minority ethnic (BAME) communities and the ways in which these identities have been constructed, contested, and politicized.
- Develop critical thinking skills and the ability to analyze social, cultural, and political issues related to race and ethnicity in Britain, using a range of theoretical and methodological approaches.
- Examine the role of institutions such as the media, education, and government in shaping attitudes towards race and ethnicity, and evaluate the effectiveness of policies and initiatives aimed at promoting racial equality.
- Understand the impact of racism and discrimination on individuals and communities, and explore strategies for challenging and resisting racist attitudes and practices.
- Develop skills in research, analysis, and communication, through assignments such as essays, presentations, and group projects.
- Engage with a range of primary and secondary sources, including academic texts, government reports, media sources, and personal testimonies, in order to gain a multifaceted understanding of race and ethnicity in Britain.
- Foster empathy, respect, and understanding for diverse perspectives and experiences, and cultivate a commitment to social justice and anti-racism.

- Develop skills in self-reflection and critical self-awareness, in order to understand how our own experiences and identities shape our perspectives on race and ethnicity in Britain.

Contenu de la matière

- Introduction to race and ethnicity in Britain
- The construction of racial and ethnic identities
- Colonialism and its legacy
- Immigration and the making of multicultural Britain
- Black British identities
- Asian British identities
- Minority ethnic communities in Britain
- Institutions and race in Britain
- Anti-racism and social justice
- Reflection and action

Connaissances préalables recommandées

Prior knowledge that may be useful before taking a course on race and ethnicity in Britain includes:

- A basic understanding of British history, including the major historical events and figures that have shaped the country.
- A basic understanding of social and political issues in contemporary Britain, including issues related to diversity, multiculturalism, and race relations.
- Familiarity with key concepts and terminology related to race and ethnicity, such as racism, prejudice, discrimination, and intersectionality.
- Knowledge of relevant theoretical perspectives and research methods used in the study of race and ethnicity, such as critical race theory, intersectionality, and ethnography.
- Familiarity with relevant legislation and policies related to race and ethnicity in Britain, such as the Race Relations Act, the Equality Act, and government initiatives aimed at promoting diversity and inclusion.
- Awareness of current debates and controversies related to race and ethnicity in Britain, such as the Windrush scandal, Black Lives Matter movement, and debates around multiculturalism and national identity.

Mode d'évaluation

- The final exam is graded separately (50%).

- The continuous evaluation covers students' performance in class; participation, presentations and assignments are all taken into consideration (50%).

This course aims to allow students :

6. Improving overall communication skills: The primary goal of a communicative skills course is to help individuals become better communicators. This may involve improving their ability to express their thoughts and ideas effectively, listen actively, and communicate clearly.
7. Enhancing interpersonal communication: Effective communication is crucial in building positive relationships with others. A communicative skills course may focus on developing skills such as active listening, empathy, and conflict resolution to help individuals build stronger relationships with others.
8. Developing effective presentation skills: In many professional contexts, individuals may be required to deliver presentations or speeches. A communicative skills course may include training in areas such as public speaking, storytelling, and visual communication to help individuals become more effective presenters.
9. Improving cross-cultural communication: In today's globalized world, individuals must often communicate with people from different cultures and backgrounds. A communicative skills course may include training in cross-cultural communication to help individuals navigate cultural differences and communicate effectively with people from diverse backgrounds.
10. Enhancing digital communication skills: With the rise of digital communication, individuals must also develop effective digital communication skills. A communicative skills course may include training in areas such as email etiquette, video conferencing, and social media communication to help individuals communicate effectively in a digital context.

Connaissances préalables recommandées

*Prior experience in public speaking or presenting may be helpful.

*Effective communication requires sensitivity to cultural differences, so prior knowledge of cultural norms and practices can be helpful.

* Students should be able to analyze and evaluate information, arguments, and ideas critically to develop logical and effective communication strategies.

Contenu de la matière

4. Effective public speaking: Teaching principles to organize a speech, use body language, and engage with the audience.
5. Inter-cultural communication: Developing the ability to communicate effectively across cultural boundaries, recognizing and respecting cultural differences, adapting to different communication styles, and avoiding misunderstandings.

6. Persuasion and influence: Teaching how to build a compelling argument, using emotional appeals and social proof to persuade others. Additionally, developing skills like active listening, nonverbal communication, conflict resolution, storytelling, media literacy, and interpersonal communication.

This course aims to :

- *Evaluate the ways in which historical cultural contexts have influenced American literature.
- *Engage with diverse voices and perspectives in American literature, including those of underrepresented and marginalized groups.
- *Identify and analyse major themes, styles, and movements in American literature.

Connaissances préalables recommandées

The students must be familiar with American history, culture, and literary traditions. This could include a general understanding of major historical events such as the American Revolution, the Civil War, and the Civil Rights Movement, as well as knowledge of important literary movements such as romanticism, realism, and modernism.

Contenu de la matière

Intersectionality and Identity: Many contemporary American writers explore issues of identity and intersectionality, including race, gender, sexuality, and class. For example, you could look at works by writers like Jesmyn Ward ("Sing, Unburied, Sing"), Chimamanda Ngozi Adichie ("Americanah"), and Junot Diaz ("The Brief Wondrous Life of Oscar Wao").

Climate Change and Environmentalism: Climate change and environmentalism have become increasingly urgent issues in contemporary American society, and many writers are grappling with these themes in their work. Some notable examples, amongst others, include Barbara Kingsolver's "Flight Behavior," Amitav Ghosh's "The Great Derangement," and Jeff Vandermeer's "Annihilation."

Immigrant Experience: Immigration has been a contentious issue in American politics and society, and many contemporary American writers explore the experiences of immigrants and their families. Some notable works include Imbolo Mbue's "Behold the Dreamers," Yaa Gyasi's "Homegoing," and Jhumpa Lahiri's "The Namesake."

1. To equip students with a critical understanding of discourse and its relationship with different forms of communication, such as literature, historical texts, political discourse, and news texts.
2. To introduce students to key concepts, theories, and methodologies used in discourse analysis, and to provide them with the skills necessary to analyze and interpret a range of discourses.
3. To encourage students to develop a reflexive and ethical approach to discourse analysis, and to appreciate the social and political implications of their analytical work. This might involve exploring issues such as power, ideology, representation, and identity, and considering the ways in which discourse shapes and reflects social reality.

Connaissances préalables recommandées (descriptif succinct des connaissances requises pour pouvoir suivre cet enseignement – Maximum 2 lignes).

The students should have knowledge of basic concepts such as language structure, semantics, and pragmatics, as well as an understanding of the social and cultural contexts that shape communication. Objectifs de l'enseignement (Décrire ce que l'étudiant est censé avoir acquis comme compétences après le succès à cette matière – maximum 3 lignes).

1. Develop students' ability to recognize and evaluate logical fallacies in arguments. This objective would involve teaching students the common types of logical fallacies and providing opportunities for them to practice identifying and critiquing these fallacies in various forms of media and communication.
2. Help students understand how cognitive biases can affect their thinking and decision-making processes. This objective would involve teaching students about various cognitive biases, such as confirmation bias and the availability heuristic, and providing opportunities for them to reflect on how these biases may have affected their own thinking in the past.
3. Teach students how to evaluate scientific claims and arguments. This objective would involve teaching students about the scientific method, how to evaluate evidence, and how to distinguish between scientific and pseudoscientific claims.
4. Develop students' ability to construct and evaluate persuasive arguments. This objective would involve teaching students about rhetoric, the elements of persuasive communication, and how to construct arguments that are based on sound evidence and reasoning. Students would also learn how to evaluate the arguments of others and identify weaknesses and fallacies.

Connaissances préalables recommandées (descriptif succinct des connaissances requises pour pouvoir suivre cet enseignement – Maximum 2 lignes).

Students should ideally have some prior knowledge in basic reading, writing, communication, and analytical skills. They should also have familiarity with critical thinking concepts, as well as an open-mindedness and willingness to engage in dialogue to take a course on critical thinking.

Contenu de la matière (indiquer obligatoirement le contenu détaillé du programme en présentiel et du travail personnel)

1. Introduction to critical thinking and its importance in today's world: In this section, students may be introduced to the concept of critical thinking and why it is important in our daily lives. They may learn about the history of critical thinking, its relevance in different contexts, and the benefits of being a critical thinker.
2. Logical reasoning, including identifying and evaluating arguments and fallacies: This section may cover the basics of deductive and inductive reasoning, identifying premises and conclusions, and evaluating the validity and soundness of arguments. Students may also learn about common logical fallacies, such as ad hominem attacks, false dichotomies, and strawman arguments.
3. Cognitive biases and how they can affect thinking and decision-making: This section may cover different types of cognitive biases, such as confirmation bias, the availability heuristic, and the anchoring effect. Students may learn how to recognize these biases and how they can affect their thinking and decision-making processes.

4. Scientific reasoning, including evaluating scientific claims and evidence: In this section, students may learn about the scientific method, the process of hypothesis testing, and the difference between correlation and causation. They may also learn how to evaluate scientific claims and evidence, how to recognize common types of scientific fraud, and how to apply scientific reasoning in their own lives.
5. Rhetoric and argumentation, including constructing and evaluating persuasive arguments: This section may cover the basics of rhetoric, such as the different modes of persuasion (ethos, logos, and pathos), the structure of arguments, and how to construct effective arguments. Students may also learn how to evaluate the arguments of others, how to identify logical fallacies and other weaknesses, and how to engage in constructive dialogue.

Motivation Letter

To whom it might concern,

Opening a new Master's degree program in literature and civilization may offer several potential benefits. The department will meet the students' demands through increasing students demand for a Master's degree program in literature and civilization, as many students are passionate about these topics and want to deepen their understanding and expertise. Additionally, the department's offering will be enriched and diverse with new courses that would attract a wider range of students interested in literary or civilization studies. Opening a new Master's degree program at the department of English can enhance the latter's reputation and prestige, both within the university and in the wider academic community. Furthermore, it will support research in the faculty by providing opportunities for faculty members to pursue scholarly activity in their areas of expertise, which can help to advance the field of literature and civilization. A Master's degree program in literature and civilization can prepare students for a range of careers in fields such as education, publishing, cultural management, and academia. This can help to meet the needs of employers and support the development of the workforce. Finally, the department can greatly benefit from the available teaching staff, as there are numerous teachers who specialize in literature or civilization and could provide valuable guidance to students pursuing postgraduate studies.

Thank you for your time. I look forward to your response.

Sincerely,

The Rector
